The Courier-Journal, the Constitution and the Public Printing.

Every editor or speaker who advocate the new Constitution, attempts to crush the Courier-Journal's opposition to the jungle of absurdities, by charging that the prospective loss of the public printing is the cause of that paper's course. The attention of all who have been foolish enough to believe the state. on the 2nd inst. ment is respectfully called to the follow-

The impotent wrath of many of the friends of the new Constitution has manifested itself in charging that the Courier-Journal's opposition was born of a fear of losing the public printing.

A few words on this charge; a charge which no intelligent man utters, and no honest man believes.

The Courier-Journal has no interest in the public printing, desires none, and would accept none.

The printing company which does the work is owned by four or five gentlemen, only one of whom has any interest in the Courier-Journal.

The Courier Journal favors a change in the system, and if the new Constitution is beaten will support a bill to have it done by contract.

One of the few things we have found to approve in the new Constitution relates to the public printing. It was put there, not because it belongs there, but because some of the strategists thought it would embarrass the Courier-Journal, and was voted for by many with a dishonest purpose of asserting that the opposition of the Courier-Journal, long before developed, was due to that provision.

Equally dishonest and equally harmless is the charge that the opposition to first day they were on the streets, Mon. too that he's "ges so." the Constitution is due to corporate in- day, they would'nt work, but Tuesday fluences.

It is due to the ignorance, selfishness and double-dealing manifest in every section of the new Constitution.

It is due to the favor shown existing corporations and the obstacles to the formation of competitive organizations. It is due to the utterances in the convention of its ablest members. It is due to the endless litigation which the new Constitution makes inevitable. It is due to the fact that while reducadded to the tax list $90,000,000 made up of the household effects and the agricul-

Now take a strong board, about 1 by 10 inches, 14 feet long. having your cross pieces placed 34 feet apart, bolt your boards, one on the upper edge of each row (as shown in Fig. 3). Absconding Bees.

Bees often desert their hives in early spring. Sometimes this is caused by dissatisfaction with the hive, sometimes from want of food, and often, doubtless. because they are weak and dissatisfied. As a rule, good strong colonies, with ample stores of food, seldom give trouble in this way.

As to the prevention, Root in his "A B C of Bee Culture" says: "If you would not lose your bees by natural swarming, clip the wings of all queens as soon as they begin laying; then look after them often and know what is going on in the apiary every day during the swarming season. If you would not have runaway swarms in the spring, and while queens are being fertilized, confine your experiments to pecks of bees instead Professor Cook, in his "Beekeeper's Guide," says: "Sometimes swarms break cluster and take wing for their prospective home before the beekeeper has hived them. Throwing dirt among them will sometimes cause them to light again. Throwing water among them in form of a fine spray will always do this. For such purpose some hand pump is desirable. Another important use for a fountain pump in the apiary is this: If a swarm, when clustered, be sprinkled occasionally, it will remain clustered indefinitely. While most customs have a reasonable basis, the common one of horns and bells and beating of pans to stop a swarm is a notable exception. It does not the least good."

Non-Sitting Breeds. A well known authority on poultry taken off.

The question of breeds is one over which very many battles are fought. I purpose simply to state the merits of those which I have kept or of which I have personal experience, without going further into the subject. Much depends, naturally, on where the fowls are to be kept. I have long, narrow pens, which are not big enough to keep in grass, and are therefore suitable for the fowls that bear confinement well. My other yards are each the sixth of an acre in extent and sown to grass. For the young birds Days. there is an acre of grass, divided across the middle, and therefore not all used at

The non-sitting breeds I keep and find successful are black and golden spangled Hamburgs, which are not only beautiful birds, but incessant layers. The only drawback is that there eggs are small and white, which color is a characteristic of the eggs of non-sitting breeds. For the table the Hamburgs are too small, mated exhortation exclaimed: "Ah, but but have a flavor like the game fowl, and Heaven is my home!" the golden spangled birds are, in fact, more like pheasants, both to look at and hall shouted: "I thought you lived in to eat, than ordinary fowls. The term "perpetual" layers must be taken with reservations. No fowls lay, or should be encouraged to lay, during the molting season; but, roughly speaking, these non-sitting breeds may be said to lay steadily, if pullets-which always begin at six months or earlier-for nine or ten months of the year. If hens, been whistlin' all the mornin'?" these can't be depended on for more than eight months. ENLARGING A PICTURE.

The Easiest Thing in the World If One Knows Just How to Do It.

There are a great many things which seem very mysterious and difficult to accomplish till after a few simple words of explanation. Then we wonder why we never discovered the easy solution. It seems strange that anyone who has practiced drawing should not soon know the easiest and most exact way to enlarge court house a picture, but the fact is many young artists do not find out this little secret till after they have bothered themselves greatly and mourned over many unsuccessful efforts.

You see in the pretty outline picture a charming little fellow of the "Little Lord Fauntleroy" style. He is sitting in a willow chair, with a cushion behind him, while he gazes intently out of the window. The picture is three inches wide and five inches long. I have diyou wish to make a copy of this picture twice as large as the original, take a piece of paper of sufficient size and draw a panel six inches wide and ten inches Sarah Millington, his sister, a pretty long, and then divide it into squares measuring two inches each way. You understand immediately that as the husband of Mrs. Millington, and one of original picture is divided into fifteen the wealthiest citizens of Fort Collins. original picture is divided into fifteen squares, so your copy will have also fifteen squares, but those in the copy will be twice as wide and twice as long as those in the original. I already deteet myself in an error. I spoke of making the picture "twice as large." The fact is the picture will be four

A CELEBRATED COLORADO CASE.

Acquittal of the Millingtons After a Long

Legal Battle. Ringing cheers went up in the Denver Chamber of Commerce recently when the jury in the celebrated Millington murder case brought in a verdict of not guilty. The defendants were overwhelmed with congratulations, and a scene of the wildest excitement prevailed in the temporary

FRANK AND DILLIE MILLINGTON. This demonstration was a marked contrast to that which took place when Frank Millington, Mary Millington, his wife, and young girl of eighteen, were accused of poisoning William H. Avery, the former Colo. Then a howling mob assaulted and threatened to lynch them.

The case was a remarkable one. In 1884 Frank Millington, then fresh from college, entered into partnership with W. H Avery. Mrs. Avery was the organist in one of the churches and a leader in Fort Collins social circles. Avery was a grim, taciturn man, absorbed in business and much away from home, and Millington was thrown a great deal in the society of

In May, 1890, Avery was taken suddenly ill, and died a few weeks afterward. Just before his sickness Millington left the state, but he returned to Denver shortly after Avery's death, and he and Mrs. Avery were married secretly at Hastings, Neb. When the gossips of Fort Collins heard of the wedding they were wild. It was learned that during Millington's absence Mrs. Avery had corresponded with him through his sister Sarah, or "Dillie," as she was called. Avery's body was exhumed, but no trace of poison could be found. But Fort Collins was not satisfied. The viscera were again dug up, and the presence of a small quantity of arsenic discovered. Then Millington and his wife and sister were ac cused of poisoning Avery, and they were arrested and almost mobbed by the popu

The trial disclosed the fact that Mrs Millington was a much abused woman: that her husband was cold and cruel; that she fell in love with Millington, but that their relations were pure, and she was contemplating a divorce when Avery died. There was no evidence of crime. The traces of arsenic in the viscera undoubtedly came from the embalming fluid. Then there was a revulsion of popular feeling, and the acquittal of the defendants was the signal for an uproarious display of delight.

THE dam porpoises are said to help their young in their efforts to breathe by bearing them up to the surface of the water on their flippers. The spiracle, or blowhole, appears to be a sensitive part of the head, for when touched with the hand the porpoise invariably shows signs of great discomfort by lashing the tail very violently.

> TO BE CONTINUED. A ROMANCE OF

Two Brothers

Gerald had thus spoken with his friend only a single day preceding the conversation held between Sylvan and himself, as recorded, at the bedside of the latter. All was soon arranged. Dr. Clyde pulled certain secret professional wires (in certain ways empowered to do so by his position at Bellevue) and on a certain morning Gerald woke in expectation that the evening would come to him packed with a prodigious fatality. His liquid had been perfected, and he felt certain that even the faintest error had not crept into its composition. The tall flask that held it stood on a shelf in his laboratory. He had discharged his assistant; the work, for good or evil, for success or failure, was finished at last. He scarcely ate a morsel during the day, and when the darkness of an autumn evening fell blandly upon the huge town, he sought the room which had witnessed his earnest toil, lit three or four gas-jets, and strove to engage himself with a book during the hours that must elapse between then and the time at which the corpse would be brought him.

But reading was impossible. He felt greatly excited, and yet his nerves were firm as steel. He had prepared a long, solid table for the reception of the body when it should appear. At intervals he $2 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE fixed his gaze upon the dusky and pol-When not so paid $2.50 will be charged. wa ished surface close at hand. What would it presently reveal? Would the body be that of man or woman? Had STANFORD, KY., - . JUNE 5 1891 he done wrong in requesting Clyde not to come? Might not the utter solitude which he had proposed to himself as a sort of tribute due to the immense seriousness of his father's attempt, prove sterner than his endurance could meet? Just beyond the chamber in which he now sat were two others belonging to himself. His landlady, a kind though rather stupid person, had been made aware of the strange, dumb guest that would arrive at midnight, or a little later; but she had also been led to believe that perhaps purposes of anatomic dissection were alone the cause of so odd an event. The other lodgers in the house were quiet folk who would most probably be fast asleep in their beds by the time the whole eerie thing occurred.

And so, restless yet placid, Gerald waited. Through his open window the voices of the great darkened city stole. Every separate noise, from the rattle of a passing carriage to the far boom of a steamboat on one of the rivers, clad itself with audible language. In the next room there was a large clock, flight is more likely to be solved by till now. But now they seemed to whose tickings had never troubled him vacillate, as it were, between two spoken sentences-"what a fool" and 'wait and see." Finally, though annoyed at his own weakness, Gerald rose, went into that adjoining room, and stopped the clock.

But he looked at its hands before he did so. How the time dragged! There THE result of the efforts made to pre- were still two good hours for him to

CHAPTER VII.

It was nearly half-past twelve, and Gerald had got to be so anxious that a glimpse of his own face in a glass made him start annoyedly at its pallor. The house was very still, and so was the commonplace side-street, off near Second avenue, a little westward of its raw up-town ugliness. For a good while he had not heard a single vehicle pass. The curtains were drawn at his windows; all was ready. Suddenly a clamor as of heavy wheels rang upon his ears. He started up. The noise ceased just at his door. He went downstairs with a fleet step; the descent was

Gerald stared into the still face and his amazement deepened as it began to blend with a vague, jarring sense of recognition. Where had he seen that dead face before? Had he seen it before? . . . A mist shrouded his eyes for a moment. He staggered backward with one hand over his brow. 'Somewhere, somehow you have seen it," said a voice. Soon he had quite mastered himself. He went close to the prone shape and gazed upon it. The wrappings which inclosed it were still almost intact. A glimpse of neck had been disclosed, but no more than that. He stared down upon the statuesque face. How beautiful it was! A thought flashed through his mind: "If I had known that woman while living, how I could have loved Unconsciously he pressed his hands together, and still stared with keen ardor into those colorless features. A self?" strange impulse, full of passion that bewildered while it beset him, now fired his veins. "To love a dead woman!

How horrible!" he swiftly reflected. Then he tried to laugh, and his laughter died away with a forlorn fall. It was an impossible passion, he told himself; it was indeed no passion at all. When, with extreme abruptness, her eyes unclosed, they darted forth wild, affrighted lusters.

Consciousness had come to her, and with it strong alarm. She raised herself slowly, shudderingly, from the level where she lay. It was then that Gerald sprang toward her.

"Don't be frightened," he said. "You're quite safe." And he helped her to rise, wrapping closer about her shape the large loose rainment in which it had first been clad. Kentucky for Cleveland.

Congressman J. B. McCreary, who is in Washington, was interviewed by the Star on the failure of the Kentucky Democratic convention to endorse Cleveland, and he said :

"At least two-thirds of the members were admirers of Mr. Cleveland and the general sentiment was friendly to him. He is strong in the State and was strong there. There is no significance at all to be attached to the Cleveland resolution episode, which happened at the end of 131pm the convention. All the regular work 247 am had been done and but few delegates were present. I was absent, as many others were, and I understand that there were not fifty men in the hall when the resolution was offered and withdrawn. I talked around among the members of the convention and I know I am correct when I say that there was a strong and prevailing Cleveland sentiment among the delegates to the convention. The silver resolution meant free coinage and there is a very general sentiment in the State in favor of free coinage. But with regard to Mr. Cleveland they feel thus:

"They believe him to be able, honest est and patriotic. They consider him a sturdy democrat, a natural leader and a statesman, and they hope that things will so shape themselves as to make him the nominee of the next democratic National Convention. They understand, as he does, that he must carry New York, and they believe that he is Office on Main street, opposite Portman House, patriotic enough not to seek the nomination if the situation in that State is such as to lead him to believe that he cannot carry it. I think I sum up the prevailing sentiment in Kentucky when to be of a pale blue. I say that there is no disposition to force Mr. Cleveland's nomination, but that they hope that the political situation will be such as to make him the party nominee. Whenever his name was mentioned in the convention it was greeted with loud applause, and on the night of the third day, when all the fireworks had been set off and general enthusiasm had cooled down, I mentioned Lot on Main Street in Stanford his name in a speech nominating a candidate for attorney general in connection with those of Jefferson and Jackson, and the applause was very enthusiastic.

"While the silver question is an important one, and we believe in free coinage, I do not think it is going to be the greatest issue in the next presidential campaign. The tariff is the greatest issue still and it will be in that campaign. I think the silver question may be taken out of politics before that time. When the next Congress meets the House will pass a free coinage bill, probably before it will go to the White House. Mr. Har-BARBEE & CASTLEMAN rison will veto it. The house will pass the estate should revert to "our heirs," present law is about as bad as it can be, and it must be replaced with something else. I think a measure similar to and enlarging the Bland-Allison bill, compelling the purchase of three or four million dollars' worth of silver each month and its coinage into silver dollars, will be adopted. This would increase the volume of silver 40 or 50 millions a year. It would be the next best thing to free coinage and would dispose of the The property is valuable and is situated present law, which is not satisfactory."

My Harbinger.

A friend whom I have missed for many months Came back to me this morning. I was sure, When first I wakened, something good would The sky was full of promises. The earth eemed ready for what heaven might bestow,

And I. forewarned and watchful of each sign. Was standing at my window when I heard A coming, not of footsteps, but of wings, And there he was, my dear red breasted friend!

Oh, how my heart and eyes went out to him! My heart with joy, my eyes to see if he Looked travel worn or weary with his flight; But, with the same old jaunty air I loved, He fluttered weariness from off his wings. And turned and looked inquiringly at me.

It was so sweet to welcome him once more

To know that he was faithful, and that I

Might now look forward to the certainty

Of seeing all the promises fulfilled! Each leafless tree a halo wore of green; Already flowery May had come, and June Was waiting with her train o'er yonder hill; I saw it all, while yet the earth was bare, Because my little friend was here and knew It all was coming, and would have me know Then he became so glad he sang, and I-

Chivalrous Devotion.

At the most extensive aquarium in England, the Brighton Zoo, the female lobster recently cast her shell. She screwed herself up together on the toes bookworm and a studious recluse as his and tail and suddenly bent her body. Snap went the shell in its center, and the case of the back came away in one piece. The claws were her next care, and she worked away at them for a long time. It was a proceeding of extreme delicacy, considering that all the flesh of the great claw had to be passed through the small base. During the operation one claw came off altogether, and this must have seemed to the lobster lady a serious misfortune, as it will not grow to its full size again until the second year. The tail and legs gave very little trouble, and the body, when thus undressed, proved

The shell casting over, the lobster sank on the sand, and this action seemed a signal for the attack of every creature in the tank.

The defenseless victim bade fair to succumb to the fury of her enemies, when the male lobster suddenly came to the rescue. Standing over his helpless better half, he fought her assailants relentlessly. Day and night did he watch over her, until her shell was sufficiently hardened to protect her in fighting her own battles.

When this happy moment arrived he broke it in his nippers, and ate the meat. He then dug a hole in the sand, placed in and is perhaps the wealthiest man of and piled a number of small stones above the grave. - Youth's Companion.
